Making the Vision of DowDuPont a Reality

March 16, 2016

We continue to take significant steps forward to realize the vision for DowDuPont once the merger closes and the subsequent industry leading businesses we intend to create in Agriculture, Material Science and Specialty Products. In recent weeks, we have completed the initial filing of the S-4, a key regulatory filing, announced intended headquarters locations for each of the proposed future businesses, and initiated key integration planning activities.

Today, we are pleased to share another significant step forward. Dow and DuPont have formed a Joint Integration Management Office (JIMO) team to run the integration process across our two companies. With oversight from the joint Steering Committee headed by Ed Breen, our chairman and CEO, and Andrew Liveris, Dow's chairman and CEO, the JIMO's mandate is to deliver a successful merger, drive the formation of the three successful new companies we intend to create, and capture the full potential synergies, consolidation savings and productivity improvements.

The JIMO will fulfill these objectives by providing guidance and support to both the businesses and functions of Dow and DuPont in preparation for Day 1 of the combined company and in standing up the intended three strong, independent companies thereafter. Additionally, the JIMO will coordinate integration planning activities, ensure the business and functional teams have the resources and guidance they need to deliver their targets, and provide transparency on progress.

The Joint Integration Management Office is another substantial step forward in the merger process, said Breen. The power that comes from working as one integration team will help drive the successful execution of this transaction, which in turn will drive substantial value for our customers, employees and shareholders.

Joint Integration Management Office Team

The JIMO team is comprised of 16 leaders across both companies who have already begun planning for a successful integration. In a merger of equals, integration planning and execution must be a joint effort, as is reflected in the composition of the JIMO.

We are pleased to announce the following leaders for each work stream:

- Jim Fitterling, Dow, President and Chief Operating Officer
- Rick Olson, DuPont, Corporate Services

Master Planning

- Mike Meath, Dow, Operations Support Services, M&A Technology Center
- Linda West, DuPont, Corporate Planning and Analyses

- Meghan Cassidy, DuPont, Talent Management & Leadership Development

Change Management and Communications

In addition, business, functional and geographic teams are being formed and aligned and members from both companies will be announced in the coming weeks. The JIMO and associated teams will be supported by a team of McKinsey consultants, who have guided many companies through large, successful integrations.

Through the JIMO, our engagement with our counterparts at Dow has been very productive, said Olson. We look forward to providing regular updates on our path to forming the three industry-leading companies we intend to create, and we appreciate the support many colleagues across DuPont and Dow will provide the JIMO. In the meantime, we are asking everyone to stay focused on their commitments and deliver strong performance that benefits all of our stakeholders throughout 2016.
