Ratings Update

'ilAA-' Rating Affirmed And Outlook Revised To Stable On Expected Reduction In Leverage In 2014

Overview

- We believe Partner will continue to pursue its policy of reducing leverage while refraining from distributing dividends, so that its leverage ratios will be commensurate with its current rating by next year.
- In our opinion, Partner's business risk profile has increased due to heightened competition as new mobile network operators have entered the market.
- We are affirming the 'ilAA-' rating on Israel-based telecommunications company, Partner Communications Co. Ltd., and revising the outlook on the rating to stable from negative.
- The stable outlook reflects our assessment that, in the short term, the company will continue to pursue its financial policy that supports a reduction in leverage, such that it will manage to maintain financial metrics that we consider commensurate with the current rating, despite continued challenges in the telecoms sector.

Rating Action

On June 20, 2013, Standard & Poor's Maalot affirmed the 'ilAA-' rating on Israel-based telecommunications company, Partner Communications Co. Ltd., and at the same time revised the outlook on the rating to stable from negative.

Rationale

The affirmation of the rating on Partner reflects our assessment that the company will continue in the short term to pursue its financial policy of reducing its leverage while refraining from distributing dividends. The reduction in leverage will allow Partner, in our opinion, to maintain financial metrics which we consider commensurate with the current rating, despite market conditions which we expect will continue to be challenging.

We believe that the adjusted ratio of debt to EBITDA will reach about 3.6x at the end of 2013 and 3.3x at the end of 2014. The worsening of Partner's credit metrics in 2013, compared to 2012, reflects the competitive pressure which became more significant in 2012-2013 compared to 2011, pushing adjusted EBITDA margins down to a level of 28% in 2012 from 32% in 2011 and from 39% in 2010. In our opinion, revenues will continue to fall in 2013, stabilizing in 2014. Most of this decrease, we believe, will be due to a fall in income from cellular services. Partner began taking some cost-cutting measures toward the end of 2011, though we believe it still has more to do on this score.

In our base-case scenario, we expect Partner to maintain its market share of about 30% in 2013-2014, and assume that it will not distribute dividends in 2013. In the medium term, we believe Partner faces growth opportunities, such as 4G investments, television services based on Internet protocol (IPTV), and the field of fixed-line activities following reforms in the wholesale market. However, the impact of these growth opportunities remains unclear, since they require additional investments which could weaken the company's credit metrics and which lead to a negative rating action.

Partner Communications Co. Ltd.

Liquidity

According to our criteria, Partner has “adequate” liquidity. We believe that the ratio of the company’s sources to uses in 2013 will reach about 1.2x.

We assume that Partner's major sources of liquidity in 2013 are:

- Cash and short-term investments of new Israeli shekel (NIS) 548 million ($152 million) as of Dec. 31, 2012; and
- Cash flow operating activity of NIS 1.2 billion.

We assume that the main uses will be:

- Repayment of principal of NIS 700 million;
- Capital expenditure of NIS 450 million; and
- Securitization of receivables of NIS 250 million, according to the assumptions in our methodology on securitizations.

Outlook

The stable outlook reflects our assessment that the company will continue in the short term to pursue a financial policy that supports a reduction in leverage, such that it will maintain credit metrics that we consider commensurate with the current rating, despite continued challenges in the telecommunications sector. We regard an adjusted ratio of debt to EBITDA of about 3.5x and adjusted EBITDA margin of about 25% as being commensurate with the current rating.

We could raise Partner’s rating if the company shows an adjusted ratio of debt to EBITDA of less than 3.0x and adjusted EBITDA margin of more than 30%. We also anticipate that Partner will maintain a level of liquidity that balances the company’s investment needs.

We would consider lowering the rating if the company presents an adjusted ratio of debt to EBITDA of more than 4.0x and if its adjusted EBITDA margin is less than 20%.
