Item 2.06 Material Impairments

At its meeting on February 9, 2007, the board of directors of Coca-Cola Enterprises Inc. concluded that a material charge for impairment to its North American franchise license intangible assets was required under generally accepted accounting principles applicable to the company.

The annual impairment tests of goodwill and franchise license intangible assets were performed as of October 27, 2006, and indicated that the estimated value of the company's North American franchise license intangible assets was less than their carrying amount. As such, the company recorded a $2.9 billion ($1.8 billion net of tax, or $3.80 per common share) non-cash impairment charge to reduce the carrying amount of these assets to their estimated fair value. If, in the future, the estimated fair value of the company's North American franchise rights were to decline further, it would be necessary to record an additional non-cash impairment charge. The decline in the estimated fair value of the company's North American franchise intangible assets reflects the negative impact of several contributing factors, which resulted in a reduction in the forecasted cash flows and growth rates used to estimate fair value. These factors include, but are not limited to, (1) an extraordinary increase in raw material costs expected in 2007, driven by significant increases in the cost of aluminum and high fructose corn syrup (a sweetener); (2) a challenging marketplace environment including continued weakness in the carbonated soft drink category and increased pricing pressures in several high-growth categories, such as water; and (3) increased interest rates contributing to a higher discount rate and capital charge. Furthermore, the business and marketplace environments in which the company currently operates differ significantly from the historical environment that drove the business cases used to value and record the acquisition of certain of its North American franchise rights. Accordingly, for certain acquisitions the company has been unable to attain the forecasted growth projections that were used to value the franchise rights at the time they were acquired.

Item 5.03. Amendments to Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws; Change in Fiscal Year.
