Merger Integration Update: Difficult Decisions and Big Opportunities

To the Capella Team:

As summer begins, we're just a couple of months away from the expected closing of our merger with Strayer Education Inc. Things are starting to feel very real at this point as we move from discussion to action, and as momentum builds. Although there is a lot to be excited about, it's important to remember that this sense of "realness" is multidimensional. Not long ago, we announced merger-related job impacts, and I want to reiterate that as a leadership team we understand the reality of the situation for those who are impacted. We will continue to do our utmost to show sensitivity, respect, and support to our colleagues as they transition out of the organization. See below for more updates on this.

As always, if you have specific questions, send them to MergerQA@share.capella.edu. We'll do our best to reach out to you directly or address them in a future merger integration update.

News and updates from the last four weeks

Decisions on impacted teams. In May, the functional leaders of impacted teams at Capella—Human Resources, Finance and Accounting, Legal, and Corporate Communications and Public Affairs—shared their new organizational structures with the CEC Leadership team (updated org charts will be available on Stella in the coming days). These team structures are the result of careful, collaborative planning by multiple stakeholders at Capella and Strayer, and we're confident that they will put us in the best position for success going forward. We recognize that job impacts are difficult for those affected and for their coworkers and friends here at Capella.

Impacts on the IT team. As you may be aware, last week the IT team was informed about job impacts, both at Capella and Strayer. When the merger was announced in October, we indicated that Minneapolis would be the future headquarters for SEI IT and we did not expect a headcount reduction here. At that time, however, we didn't have the level of insight and understanding that we do now. If we'd had that level of understanding, we would have communicated differently. We aren't always going to accurately predict future state, and at times we will have to make adjustments as we learn more. That's the nature of business, and it's especially true in the markets we serve. We acknowledge that this decision is difficult and adversely impacts many of our valued colleagues.

Ultimately, these decisions were driven by some key objectives:

Maintaining a very significant investment in IT and technologies that shape the learner experience and academic quality

Finding a new middle approach for how we manage project capacity

Reconciling redundant systems and applications between the two companies

Achieving meaningful financial savings through integration

The IT function will still be headquartered in Minneapolis. As a reminder, no positions will be impacted until at least the date of the merger, which is not expected to take place until approximately 2 months from now. Also, many roles have end dates later in 2018 or even into 2019.

Karl McDonnell Town Hall meetings. Strayer CEO Karl McDonnell and the Strategic Education Inc. leadership team held two town-hall-style meetings in Minneapolis in May. Thanks to the 500+ people who attended in person or virtually. On behalf of the other leaders who participated, I want to thank you for the great questions and lively discussion. We covered a lot of things in those two sessions, but some key themes emerged:

Technology and innovation will be major drivers of the combined company's success.

Both organizations will learn from each other.

We will need to be an even more agile organization to succeed in a market that is only going to get more competitive.

Capella and Strayer have different but complementary cultures, program offerings, learner populations, and areas of strength.

And as we've said all along, the success of our learners is paramount. This was echoed again and again in the town hall meetings: if we continue to do what's best for our learners, other things will fall into place. We're planning more town hall meetings in the near future. Stay tuned!

What's happening next?

Upcoming summit in June. With the merger integration planning largely complete, our focus now shifts to executing on the many tactical and logistical aspects of becoming a combined company on Day 1. Later this week, cross-functional leadership teams from Capella and Strayer will meet in Minneapolis to discuss how both universities can share best practices, deepen our relationships with employer partners, and better serve our learners and alumni.

Learning more about Strayer. In the upcoming weeks, we'll post some video and other content on Stella to help you learn more about Strayer—the people, the work they do, and lots more.

Questions? Let us know.

Again, if you have specific questions about the integration, send them to MergerQA@share.capella.edu. We're approaching the home stretch of our merger integration process. I want to thank everyone for staying focused on our mission and the day-to-day work of serving our learners.

Sincerely,

Steve Polacek
