The following slides and remarks were presented at a Sprint employee Town Hall:

>>Michel Combes: There's also, and I was discussing that with investors this morning, there's also a little bit of confusion about the pending merger so some customers may be less likely to choose Sprint, but we should not try to find that as an excuse. Let's make sure that when someone shows up in a store at least we sell handsets or non-handsets. All of these factors which I have just mentioned led to a decrease in traffic and as a result phone net adds were -26,000 for the quarter which is more or less the same performance as in Q2.

We will launch 5G services in nine downtown areas to provide customers contiguous mobile coverage and we will expand from there so from these nine hotspots. Of course we would love to be in even more markets, but right now our low band spectrum and limited resources cannot support consistent national wide coverage and you know that it is really the rationale and the reason for the merger with T-Mobile and why this merger is so critical. The new company will be able to scale and accelerate 5G rollouts in more places more quickly. So we are going to ignite it and then I hope that through the merger we'll be able to accelerate and to take a massive lead in 5G networks in the U.S. And this chart is quite, let's say, illustrative of what I have just said. That's something that we discussed with our friends last week when we were up in Seattle. That illustrates what we can do separately versus what a combined company might do. So separately Sprint and T-Mobile do not have the resources and spectrum to reach all Americans with a broad set of 5G devices, but when we combine both companies we can build the best nationwide 5G network, one that neither company could build on its own. Look at the population that we will be able to cover with 500 mbps if we are together, more than 200 million where if we just were on our own, I mean, we cannot go beyond 150 mbps for each of us. So that's really an amazing value proposition that we will have when we will be together.

Yesterday I sent you an e-mail about some more exciting news together with T-Mobile we announced that if the merger is approved, the new company plans to build five new care centers and the first one will be right here in the Overland Park campus. Now I know that let's say, probably some of you are thinking is this just going to become one big call center after the merger. And the answer is obviously no. I mean, as you know, we are working hard in order to make sure the Overland Park will be the second headquarters of the company. It is now, of course, agreed with T-Mo. We want to bring in this campus many different types of critical businesses for the company and so that is the first announcement that was done yesterday in care but there will be other announcements to strengthen the position of Kansas City in the company moving forward and we will do the same for some of our other location such as in Reston or such as in New York.

Now I know you are all interested to know what's going on with the merger. I have seen many questions and I've always told you that I will try to update you in details around the merger when there is some news or when there is some information. As you know, there are two parts in this topic, there is the regulatory process on one side and the integration process on the other side. So let's look at what has been going on since we last met.

First from a regulatory point of view, the federal government shut down slowed things down a bit from a regulatory review perspective but we are glad it is now open and the review of our merger can get back on track. We completed CFIUS and the Team Telecom process before the end of 2018 which is one of several big steps that need to have been in the regulatory process. That's a big deal so that was a good achievement just before the end of the year. Some of us, Dow, John, Marcelo, myself we were among the Sprint leaders who gave depositions to the Department of Justice just a couple of weeks ago. That is now finished. So at least the one we were aware of so now it is up to the DOJ to work on all the materials, which have been delivered to them.

We still need to complete the region process with the FCC and DOJ, but now the FCC is back up and running it will be easier to work with them and they are also as you know 19 states reviewing the merger, 15 have already given us their approval. The California Public Utilities Commission is conducting hearings that I expect to continue into February. Dow will be there next week for his testimony, which will be very similar to what we have already submitted to the FCC. The U.S. House of Representatives Energy and Commerce and Judiciary committees announced that they plan to have a joint hearing in mid February and Marcelo has agreed to testify with John Legere.

Of course with all those hearings it is possible that let's say we might have some media coverage and remember last time when Dow had all those hearings and we had to make sure that we delivered the right balanced messages to all public for which we speak so don't be surprised if you read a few things in the press from time to time. Let's remain focused on our delivery and we should not pay attention to much to the media.

All in all we remain optimistic that final decision from government will come in the spring and that we can, that we will be able to close the deal in the first half of 19. So we are still on the same timing which has always been the same. The shutdown has maybe postponed by a few weeks, so we are always told that the, let's say the closing should occur in Q2. We were more leaning for the beginning of the quarter, that maybe now is more for the end of the quarter, but we remain more or less ballparked in the same type of timing. Of course, nothing is done. Until the very last day nothing is done. But looks like that at least the story we are presenting is compelling and that everyone gets the interest for the country for the two companies, for the competition, for the employment, for the jobs, which might be created to put those two companies together. So that is where we stand. I will continue to update you. I will continue to give you let's say at least the subtitles or whatever it might be set by the press or whatever. But I think we are moving in the right direction and so we should continue to work there. And Marcelo continues to lead the charge in that space. I can tell you he is going to spend all the next 10 days in Washington to prepare for the U.S. House of Representatives hearings which is a big deal.

While the regulatory process continues, our integration work is moving full speed ahead and most likely some of you have seen it meaning that we are progressively shifting gears in that space. Of course we still have to be cautious because we cannot do any gun-jumping or whatever. Meaning we cannot preempt any decision but we can start to prepare ourselves for the next stage. We were recently in Seattle with the management team where our Leadership Team got together to review all the integration plans. There are many teams working on this and we expect that those teams will probably add additional people whether it's on I.T., retail, on care, to ensure that these plans can be executed flawlessly.

We are moving progressively from the planning phase on the execution phase and in this phase that is when Nestor has now taken the lead so he is leading the charge for all of us in order to make sure that we enter in this execution phase in a coordinated manner and that we make sure all what has to be delivered will be delivered in a proper manner. It is going to be a big task moving forward. We will have to make some trade-offs in between our day-to-day operations and integrations but, of course, we continue to deliver on the day-to-day and also prepare the future so that is what we're doing right now.

I can tell you that I was really impressed last week when we looked at this new network that we will build together. How, let's say, we are going to put the two companies together, in order to be really growth engine in this industry. I am amazed by the fact that for one time ever we can really build, if we are successful, the number one player in the industry. And we will have the assets, we will have the skills, we will have the people, and you are part of those, which can really build this number one operator in the U.S. Think about it. I mean, we have never thought one day we would be in position to really move to number one in this industry and that is our chance now. That is the reason why and see you hear and you see that's the reason why we and Marcelo are devoting so much time because we believe that it is really the right thing to do for the company moving forward.

The next few months will be challenging. So let's be, let's be honest, it has been challenging the past few months. But the more we move in that phase, the more challenging it is because we have to do many things in parallel. Running the business and preparing the integration of the two companies for when the transaction closes, which is good. Also John and Mike from T-Mobile are planning to visit some of our locations. They came here, you remember, a few months ago. And so that's important they can go around the company just to meet some of our people and we expect to announce a Senior Leadership Team for the new company in the next coming months, which will be important in order to figure out how the company will move forward post deal, if we get the approval from the government.

>>Nestor Cano: First of all, thank you very much too many of you that all of a sudden, you are having two jobs. You are being able to do the day-to-day and also be highly motivated and engaged in the integration. We are moving forward. We were planning before Christmas, we were in a big planning season. Now we are in an execution season. We are preparing ourselves for Day Zero, meaning the day that we sign. And also starting to define all the plans and all the movements for day one is the day that we are going to meet together as a one company. We have to do things before closing. Now we are getting into real deep work. We are defining all the I.T. requirements and we are going to start coding at the end of February. We will need to recruit people in call centers for support, for support into retail, for people into retail. We have a very tall order that the two executive teams have put there is that day one, that is 60 or 90 days after closing, all the stores will be ready to work with all the combined customers. All the stores will be T-Mo, all the stores will be Sprint. There is no customer left behind. And that is a very tall order and to be ready let's call it around mid summer, or go September, July, who knows. That means that now we are getting into a very intensive moment of coding, training, defining process, as usual the list is too long and that means we need to make a few cuts on what we do first and what we do second and we need you to help us to make those priorities and get ready. The most important thing is thank you for sprinting as you guys are doing because we know, it's a lot of work, and lots of long nights and trips with cold weather and everything and we are going to get there. Thank you very much. And if there's any questions, I am glad to answer also.
