Frequent flyer programs will need to offer upgrade, credit and redemption opportunities

Web sites will need to be able to handle each other's products and services

Airports will need to be re-branded, and

Scores of other systems will need to function together.

Our people will be trained to make sure that we can appropriately meet our customers' expectations.

It will take time for all of our systems to be transformed so that we can best serve our customers. Our first area of focus will be on making changes that will permit us to handle customers in a seamless and efficient manner, to bring as many benefits to customers as quickly as we can.

Operational Merger

The third and final stage of the merger will be when we receive a single operating certificate from the FAA and can operate as a single carrier.

The operational merger will feature:

Common manuals, maintenance procedures, safety training and aircraft

Our goal is to train employees, create a unified team and, for represented employees, have joint collective bargaining agreements in place.

With that, our pilots can fly the combined United's aircraft, all our technicians can maintain them, all our flight attendants can crew them, and we will be operating as a single carrier.

When we accomplish this, we will be well along in our journey, creating the world's leading airline.
