December 13, 2006

To the Agere Team,

Now that you have had a little time to think about and perhaps gain a better understanding of the opportunities our merger with LSI will create, I wanted to talk to you about some of the things that will occur as we move through the merger process.

First, though, I'd like to tell you that the reaction from Agere's largest investors has been quite positive overall. I believe they see this as a winning combination that will open up more opportunities and create more value for our two companies, our customers and our shareholders.

I've also had the chance to talk to a number of Agere employees personally and I'm happy to see that so many of you are reacting positively to news of the planned merger -- or at least keeping an open mind as we go through this process.

Of course, we have a great deal of work to accomplish before and after the merger is complete. One of our top priorities is to ensure that we make every effort to keep employees of both companies well informed about our progress. It's no surprise that you have more questions than we have answers for at this time, but we will make every effort to respond to as many of your inquiries as we can as quickly as we can. In addition, following up on what Abhi said earlier this week in his note to you, we promise to continue to communicate frequently about the work we're doing to plan for the transition. Later today, we'll be sending you a link to our new merger website, which will provide up-to-date information including news, FAQs, key milestones and a quick look inside LSI.

I'm also pleased to announce that Mike Salute, who heads Agere's Corporate Strategy and Standards organization, and Eric Williams, who heads LSI's Corporate Development organization, have been named to lead the Integration Management Office.

That office will report directly to Abhi and me, and is charged with overall management of our integration planning process. That process will establish the guiding principles that will enable the combined company to operate as a highly effective organization focused on growing revenues, expanding our platforms and delivering financial results. Over the next few weeks, the Integration Management team will be directing and supporting functional team leaders from both companies as they carefully plan our integration strategies and then work to execute them once the merger is complete.

I can't emphasize enough how important a smooth, successful transition is for Agere, LSI, our customers and employees. And I believe we are starting off strong with the help of Mike and Eric. I also want to underscore what Abhi said earlier this week -- the work we're doing is full team effort with equal input and participation from both Agere and LSI. Together, we are creating a strong new company that will deliver exceptional customer and shareholder value and be a driving force in the industry for many years to come.

Sincerely,

Rick Clemmer
